

Acknowledgements

This book has been a long time coming; it was a long time gone, too; and now, thanks to members of the Faculty of Law at the University of Manitoba, it is here.

I owe thanks first of all, and above all else, to Mrs. Brownie Freedman, who gave her wholehearted support to my idea of putting together her husband's incomplete autobiography and assisted me all along the way. Without the support of Mrs. Freedman and her son, Martin, this work could not have been carried out. This book is dedicated to the memory of Brownie Freedman, whose remarkable life came to an end on October 8, 2008, at the age of ninety-nine.

DeLloyd Guth of the University of Manitoba Law Faculty in particular jumped in to support this project from the time of my first telephone call to him—and he also came up, at an early stage, with its subtitle: “In His Own Words.” I also received support for my research from the Faculty's Legal Research Institute and, with the help of Jesse Vorst of the University of Manitoba's Department of Economics, from the Joseph Zuken Memorial Association. Cameron Harvey, Alvin Esau, and Bryan Schwartz of the Faculty of Law have also helped out along the way. Thanks also go to Erica Grant for her work on the final version of the text.

My friends D'Arcy Phillips and Ximena Munoz of Winnipeg made me feel at home during my research visits there—and one day took the trouble to drive me around Sam Freedman's North Winnipeg. I also thank Paula Mallea, who read and commented on an earlier, and much longer, version of the manuscript.

I am especially indebted to Lorne Brandes, who provided not only me but also anyone else interested in Sam Freedman and the law in general with an extraordinary gift of twelve hours of in-depth taped interviews with the Manitoban judge, done over the fall and winter of 1977–78. Sam Freedman began to draw on these interviews when he sat down to write his autobiography, and I have used them to help fill in the gaps. They have been immensely helpful, and informative. I am also highly grateful to Harry and Mildred Gutkin, who took the time to meet with me in Winnipeg in 1998 and gave their permission for me to use the material from their interviews with Sam Freedman. Above all, I thank Ferne Cristall for her steadfast love and support.

Robert G. Clarke

